Presentation by Mark Sherwood - Native Fish Society

Join us for Mark's presentation to learn more about the Native Fish Society's work in Oregon and how you can support the efforts of their River Stewards as they work in 2018 to improve angling regulations for wild steelhead, end clear-cutting on steep slopes in Oregon's coast range, improve water quality and native fish health on the Deschutes, and work to recover Oregon's most imperiled salmon and steelhead populations in the upper Willamette River.

Mark Sherwood is the Native Fish Society's Executive Director and has served on staff for eight years. Fueled by a passion to leave our Northwest's homewaters and native fish better than he found them, Mark nurtured the growth of the Native Fish Society's cornerstone River Steward Program during his six-year tenure working in the program as its Director and Southern Regional Director. Mark started his journey into conservation after a year fly-fishing in Argentine Patagonia and two seasons working as a commercial salmon fisherman in Bristol Bay, Alaska. During these adventures, he learned about the value of local stewardship and its connection to abundant fish, great rivers and fisheries.

NFS Mission: Guided by the best-available science the Native Fish Society advocates for the protection and recovery of wild, native fish and promotes the stewardship of the habitats that sustain them.
